

Editors' Note

This issue 20, no. 3 (February 2017) is the last one produced during the tenure of outgoing co-general editor Eugene V. Gallagher, Rosemary Park Professor of Religious Studies Emeritus at Connecticut College. Gene has served ably as co-general editor of Nova Religio since 2010. During that time, Gene has commissioned articles on topics related to new and alternative Christian movements and brought to the journal his expertise on millennialism, the Christian religious tradition, and new religious movements. We appreciate Gene's critical scholarship, collegiality, and attention to detail in evaluating paper submissions and dealing with the business of Nova Religio. Nova Religio has become a stronger journal thanks to the contributions of Eugene V. Gallagher. We wish Gene the best in his active retirement!

We are pleased to announce that Joseph Laycock, Texas State University, came on board as co-general editor in November 2016. Joe is well known for his work on topics ranging from new Catholic traditions to religion and popular culture. He has published multiple articles in Nova Religio in the past seven years. We are confident that Joe will be active in attracting paper submissions to the journal. We welcome Joe to the journal's team of co-general editors as Nova Religio continues its growth in the study of new religious movements into new topical and disciplinary realms.

This past volume of Nova Religio also marks a transition in book reviews editors, with the departure of W. Michael Ashcraft, who served as book reviews editor from 2009 to 2015. During his six years in this editorial role, Mike commissioned hundreds of reviews of new and noteworthy publications in the field of new religious movement studies. We thank Mike for his many years of service. Nova Religio welcomes the return of former co-general editor Rebecca Moore, who began serving as book review editor in volume 19, no. 3.
