

Editors' Note

Volume 21 is the last one produced during the tenure of outgoing co-general editor Scott Lowe, Professor Emeritus of Religious Studies, University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire. Scott served ably as co-general editor of Nova Religio since 2012. Previous to that time, he served on the journal's board of editorial consultants for ten years. During this time, Scott has served as an expert on new and alternative religious movements in the East Asian context. He has brought to the journal his expertise on the religious traditions of China, as well as his keen editorial eye. We appreciate Scott's critical scholarship, collegiality, and attention to detail in evaluating paper submissions and dealing with the business of Nova Religio. Nova Religio has become a stronger journal thanks to his many contributions. We wish Scott the best in his active retirement!

We are pleased to announce that Marie Dallam, Associate Professor of Religious Studies at the Honors College of the University of Oklahoma, has come on board as co-general editor. Marie is well known for her work on topics ranging from the Daddy Grace movement (United House of Prayer for All People), religion and food, and her most recent work on cowboy Christians. We welcome Marie to the journal's team of co-general editors as Nova Religio continues its growth in the study of new religious movements into new topical and disciplinary realms.
